

Interrupt handling

It occurs during any cycle of the instruction cycle.

An interrupt is a signal that CPU receives from an external device or software that requires immediate attention. When an interrupt occurs the current instruction is not executed and an interrupt handler is executed to fix the interrupt.